

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=4FNbSTemxqs>

Don't Walk - Just dance!

Vienna hit the headlines earlier this year, with restyled pedestrian crossing lights, arranged into same-sex pairs (an idea copied from New Zealand).

But even the Kiwis were not the first to play with stop and walk signs at crossings.

The Irish were at it six years ago (or at least cynical car manufacturers sought a feelgood involvement in drunken St Patrick's Day revelry).

The Japanese responded with a more stylish and healthy approach to waiting at the lights. <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=w5smHgToSJI>

And the best of the lot, again a car ad, ironically, and this time from Lisbon: create a dance studio with cameras, to encourage people to enjoy waiting at lights. <http://vimeo.com/106273444>

Of course we'd rather be on the move, but at least these waits came with a little spiciness.